I am an information designer with wide experience of practice, research, writing and teaching.

I have been associated with the creation of an institutional framework for the development of information design, founding Information Design Journal in 1979, and co-founding the Information Design Association in 1992. I have also co-organised a series of Information Design Conferences from 1982 to the present day. I am a frequent conference speaker, and have published papers on information design theory and practice.

I am director of the Simplification Centre and President of the International Institute for Information Design.

Background

After training as a typographer (University of Reading, BA 1974, PhD 1988), I was a researcher with the Open University in the 70s and 80s, working in a multidisciplinary team investigating learning from text. In 1987 I started the consultancy Information Design Unit and together with business partner David Lewis grew this into the UK's largest information design agency, selling to WPP in 2001, and subsequently leading the merged information design team as part of Enterprise IG, the global branding agency. I have developed communications for major organisations in telecommunications, energy, financial services and government. My projects have been as diverse as gas bills, flight information displays, dictionaries, museum signing, lottery tickets, passport forms and board games. My clients have included Vodafone, T-Mobile, Barclays, BNP Paribas, British Gas, AXA, Aegon, and many other well known service brands.

From 2007-2011 I was Professor of Information Design at Reading University, teaching at MA and PhD levels, and launching a new research group, the Simplification Centre. In 2011, the Centre moved out into the voluntary sector, and I combine its leadership with consulting in information and service design.

I am still involved with design education, through the annual Information Design Summer School in Bath, and through invited lectures, workshops and PhD examining. Recent educational visits have included the Royal College of Art, Danube University (Krems, Austria), UCA Epsom, Brunel University, Kolding School of Design (Denmark), and Aalto University (Helsinki). I was Adjunct Professor of Communication Design at Hong Kong Polytechnic University, 2012-2017.

Research interests

I am particularly concerned with ways to make reading easier for people with poor functional literacy, and with the skills and systems needed by organisations that have to communicate complex information to a wide audience.

My research interests centre around the role of typography and layout in language: enabling writers to extend their means of expression from purely linear to graphically structured language; and supporting readers who engage with text in an active and purposeful way. My earlier academic work developed a genre theory of typographic design, and I have lately been reinterpreting this using the pattern language approach developed by the architect Christopher Alexander. The goal is to articulate what skilled designers do, in order to make their strategies more accessible to anyone who needs to make information clear. I am also involved with the growing movement of legal information design.
